Thus whilst the Macquarie passes in its way to the Darling through swampy ground, forming a sort of net-work of waters, the Narran River, west of the Darling, also passes through swampy ground, in which in fact it terminates, increasing upwards till it is met by the Balonne in 148° 25' E. and 28° 35' S. S. a river not inferior in parts to the Darling, a swift, and being, in fact, to the Darling, what the Darling, Lachlan, Murrumbidgee, and Hunter are to the Murray, with the exception that the Balonne separates into branches which join the Darling at different points. The Balonne river has already obtained some celebrity from the explorations of Sir T. MITCHELL's son, Mr. Commissioner MITCHELL, who went out in search of the bodies of some men who were said to have been slain by blacks; and who, according to the despatches, furnished his father with a map of the country in advance of him. This river, therefore, is not a discovery of Sir T. MITCHELL; but it must be borne in mind, that his object was not, of course, simply to discover, but to examine and survey. From him then we learn, that all the tract of country north and west of the Darling, was well watered everywhere, and rich in grass, whilst all on the other side of the river was parched, withered, and dry.

At 148° 46' 45" E. and 28° 2' S., Sir THOMAS came to a natural bridge of rock, about seventy miles from the furthest point reached by him in 1831. North-west of this he found a "poor sandy unpromising country," probably a touch of the desert lying to the north-west, just as it trenches on the Murrumbidgee to the south. At this bridge Mr. KENNEDY remained a month, whilst Sir THOMAS explored.

The junction of the Condamine was not made out, nor that of the Cogoon, a north-west tributary, which was traced through a beautiful country; but from 149° E. and 26' to 27° S., the eastern horizon exhibited a continuous uninterrupted fertile country, watered by a river, still known as the Balonne, which came from the north, and in the midst of that "splendid region" up rose a range named Grafton Range, in the midst of Downs called Fitz Roy, by a compliment singularly gratifying, we should suppose to the family of His EXCELLENCY our present Governor. This range is about 100 miles S.E. of LEICHHART'S Expedition Range, and which he speaks of, as we interpret his allusion.

The Balonne rises in the ranges whence, no doubt, flows LEICHHART'S river Dawson, and which he traversed; but the Cogoon rises amidst the three isolated mountains, Abundance, Bindyego, and Bindango, to the westward, which are connected with the eastern ranges by knolls of trap rock. Its first course is north-west, but it is afterwards to south-west, as is that of its tributary the Amby; and a larger river called the Maranoa follows the same kind of devious course, and joins the Balonne. This country also is described as rich in pastures and wonderfully fertile.

A tributary joined this river also; and from a region of mountainous land distinguished by cones and peaks, through which it flowed, the Balonne was found to rise in a table land named after Professor RECKLAND.

This country, we believe, was seen by LEICHHART to the south-west of Peak Range, with which no doubt it is subordinatedly connected. Ranges of considerable importance, partially of volcanic rock, rise thickly from this region, sending rivers first to north-west and then to south-west, which we presume join some of the tributaries of the Darling further south, unless, perchance, one of them furnishes the creek partially explored by Captain STURT on the edge of his desert. Trap rock and sandstone prevail in these numerous ranges, which from their position, extending westward and northward, under the parallel of 26° south, divide the system of the Darling from those explored by LEICHHART north of Peak Range.

Sir T. MITCHELL describes the northern side of the westerly dividing ranges as supplying abundant streams from lakes and springs. He also describes features which, in an instant, cause us to recognise the basin of LEICHHART'S Mackenzie; the sources of which, there can be little question, were found in the Nogoa, for both travellers make mention of its entering the sea about Broad Sound; both mention the rich soil spread over with fossil wood; both the fantastic freaks of nature in furnishing rocks in the shape of ruins, castellated piles, and pyramids. Reading the following passage, who could fail to remember LEICHHART'S "Creek of Ruined Castles"? "The country is adorned by hills of the most romantic form, presenting outlines which surpass in picturesque beauty the fairest creations of the painter. Several pyramids mark the spot where the springs were first discovered (whence I now write). Lower down appear over the woods isolated rocks, resembling ruined temples, temples, and gothic cathedrals. Other large apertures through them; and the trees being also very varied and graceful in form, and rich in colour, contribute so much to the Beauty of the scenery, that I have been induced to distinguish the river and lake by the name of a Painter. The Brigalow scrub, the rich mould, the luxuriant grass, the fragrant herbs, the course of the river from the north-west, all which LEICHHART alludes to, make us conclude that the Salvator and Claude rivers of Sir T. MITCHELL, and Balmy Creek to be the sources or tributaries of waters seen by LEICHHART farther to the eastward."

The description of the country is given with LEICHHART'S account of the Lasseter and Sutton Rivers, odd representatives of such poetical regions as the more imaginative and feeling SURVEYOR-GENERAL dedicates to Salvator Rosa, Claude Lorraine, and the Mantuan Bard.

Our friend Cape, who according to the adage "qui caput ille facit," figures under the euphonious appellation of Belyando, a name worthy of the whole corporation of Sydney; the river of which name is separated from the Nogoa, just as the Cape, a tributary of the Bushkin is separated from the more southern streams of LEICHHART'S. "Your EXCELLENCY may imagine," says Sir THOMAS, "with what disappointment I then discovered that the river which has brought us to instead of leading to the Gulf of Carpentaria, was no other than that which Mr. LEICHHART has called the Cape, a river from the west. This glorious river had led the party dancing along it, across more than two parallels of latitude, even so far as 21° 30' S. But there is nothing unnatural in this. The coast-lines and physical structure of the continent would lead to the conclusion, that the waters north of the western dividing range would flow in channels diverging after the manner of the vagaries of those to the south of it.

Certainly, it must have been mortifying to a western explorer, to be thus dragged through the country by this willow-belt Belyando into the regions of the east, only suitable for CAPE, ISAACS, and SUTTONS; but then Sir THOMAS has had the privilege of knocking off its legs, McCAUSLAND's rapscud body about the Australian Cordillera, and of ascertaining that the eastern Coast Range, hitherto supposed to extend from Wilson's Promontory to Cape York, is only imaginary: a notion, by the way, fully made out by LEICHHART, who speaks very plainly of the junction of a new system of mountains, and of a change of climate north of Peak Range, which Sir THOMAS parallels by reference to new birds and new plants in the country further on.

The net-work distribution of waters, like that at the head of the basin of the Darling, and the occurrence of the Harlequin fish as in the Maranoa, would almost identify the two systems of rivers arising from the same ranges. The occurrence of a true fig-tree, the lagoons, and Brigalow scrub, leave no doubts as to the northern waters of Mr. LEICHHART belonging to the Isaacs, &c., of LEICHHART.

The height of the dividing range of the Belyando or Cape as 600 feet above the sea. There may be doubts, however, as to the accuracy even of BUNNET's barometer, when the line of observations is so extended. On fact there is connected with meteorology in the despatches which we cannot comprehend. Surely there must be a mistake of the printer. "On almost every clear night Fahrenheit thermometer fell to 9° and occasionally a 4 m. the mercury was as low as 7°. These observations could only occur in a country clad with ice and snow, in the depth of a northern or southern winter. Is not FAHRENNHEIT put instead of REAUMUR?"

The route has been measured by Mr. KENNEDY with the chain from Cannon camp - to the Maranoa, and Sir T. MITCHELL has extended a trigonometrical survey beyond Mount Mudge to some hills beyond the Tropic. He has also numbered his camps where the country was really good, and marked them by Roman numerals deeply cut in trees, commencing from the Gulf (30 miles above Port Bonick,) northward; the lowest of the Belyando being LXIX. For this and the survey the colonists owe their thanks no less so, for the discovery of a "drain road" and a "tandem road," to their lovely and fertile territories of Nature.

In this second despatch Sir THOMAS carries out his idea of a river flowing, the Gabled Carpentaria, and ~~and~~ examining the ranges at the head of the Salween, came upon the sources of the Warren, and of a river falling north-west, which afterwards turned to the south-west and south, and at length to the east, but we dry and filled with sand. This he calls the Nive; it is 146-12-25 E., and 21-50-35 S.

Open downs and plains extended from N.W.W., a river in the mid, led him for ten successive days, as far as his horse could carry him, along the banks of the Victoria towards the tropic. Its reaches are as broad as those of the Murray, and its channels are numerous, miles apart, supplying a better watered country than any other in Australia: the soil rich with abundant water-holes.

Water, was everywhere to be found, and the richest grass. Sir THOMAS has no doubt its estuary is in the Gulf of Carpentaria; but he did not see it further than 144-34 E., 21-14 S.

In gratitude to the ALMIGHTY, for loyalty to his SOVEREIGN, he called it the Victoria. It may be presumption in us to question such an authority as Sir T. L. MITCHELL, whose judgment we would not for an instant doubt. But after the details so recently given to the world respecting the rivers running into the Gulf, and after the course of the Belyando or Cape, may not the Victoria be likely to follow a similar kind of course, and finally be found to be a tributary of the Burdekin, and which is mentioned as having plenty of water?

If, however, the Victoria flows direct to the Gulf, entering by many mouths, how is that feature to be reconciled with those distinguishing the waters of the Darling and Murray basins. Or can it be, that the Victoria of Mr. MITCHELL discharges itself like the Macquarie and Narran, into a swamp from which its waters are drained by the Plinders, Albert, &c., &c.

The enormous accumulation of mud and alluvial soil in and about the Gulf needs explanation. Will the supposed estuary of the Victoria explain it? Is its reputed or supposed channel sufficient, in its origin in sufficiently elevated land, to justify the conclusion that its effluent would extend over such an area as five or six degrees of longitude?

And can we ought to do, is to submit the case as it now stands, in the meagre detail of necessarily brief and hasty despatches, for further consideration, and to congratulate the colony and Sir THOMAS himself, upon the very important addition he has made to the dominions of Her Majesty, whatsoever may be the fate of his river.

Ranges were seen extending N.W.W. beyond the left bank of the Victoria, and to the northward. Is it we might finally ask, allowable to conclude, that the dividing range extends from the head of the Maranoa, in some degree parallel with the east coast, so interrupted ranges extend from the head of the Victoria, north-westwardly to Ardehim's Land, whence the river Nicholasou, Robinson, &c., rise? If so, the system of ranges would correspond with the frame work of the coast, and the Victoria would be drained, as was supposed, or fall into the Gulf through its channels of the Plinders, &c., &c. But LANCELOT HARRIS has placed a barrier range, north the Lynd and the Burdekin, and his given reason to believe that the Flinders has but a short course, and could no drain MITCHELL'S Victoria.

Having thus hastily run over the very interesting details of the despatches, we must reserve any further remarks on the prospects they open to the colonists for another opportunity. When the veteran himself arrives, he may, perhaps, do so to the favour of assisting us out of our difficult culicinity.

All we wish is, that another expedition may be at once set on foot to follow down the Victoria, and to ascertain the eastern boundary of STURT'S Desert—problem that must yet be solved for the honour of the country and colony to which we belong—and whether, if all other suppositions should turn out extravagant, the Victoria finds its way to the head of the Fitz Roy, which is not very likely, or absorbed in the Desert itself. The subject must not be allowed to slumber, till it be finally set at rest.

MESMERISM IN INDIA.

"How is it possible," said a lady to us on reading our late article on this subject,—"that you can pull a double tooth out of any man's head, without his knowing it?" Gookoo CHUM's case had no precedent with in her experience. To entrance a man and extract his teeth, without his knowledge! The thing seemed preposterous and we are afraid, that even the respectable testimony of sub-assistant surgeon BUDEN CHUMBA CHOWNAY did not carry with it, in her eyes, altogether gross authority. Her doubts, which probably she entertains in common with many other persons, are natural enough, and based upon experience. It would be strange, if people did not doubt, in such a case. But still, it must be admitted, that the thing is absurd only, as being in such contrast with their previous impressions, touching the subject of tooth drawing. When torture can exceed it, as practised hitherto? What gratitude should we feel towards MESMER and his followers, what statues, if not of ivory—yet ivory, should we not raise to them, all of us could lose our obnoxious grinders as comfortably and unconsciously as Gookoo CHUM! In short, if we could all chums in this delightful discovery. And how could we estimate the value of this new process, but by carefully contrasting it in detail, with the unspeakable agony of the old method, of which our memory without an effort, supplies us with the following record:—

When we were a school-boy, there was a small colony of dentists in London, who tortured the public up a kind of secret and secluded alley, lying to the right of St. Martin's-lane, called May's-building. There were a row of these remorseless men of all whom, to our boyish notions, appeared to be unhappy and misanthropic characters, who had retired like TIMON of Athens, from a world they hated, and who fed the malignant feeling they cherished for their fellow creatures, by pulling their teeth out, a shilling and half-a-crown each, according to the noise. Each shop window had a little mysterious-looking green curtain, in it, behind which you always fancied the proprietor was struggling with some frantic extractee! and whole sets of teeth, very white and bright, glistened from little glass cases at your own case, as you walked hesitatingly to the door. Of dental destiny once forced us up the court, on our own account. Ours was a double one: firm as a rock, and raging horribly, that we almost wondered to see the cabmen and cads joking and laughing as usual, as we passed through the street. We came to the first shop, and looked in the window, in the hope of penetration beyond the green curtain, so as to get a view of the countenance of the operator. As we were trying different angles of vision, we heard a howl such as we could never have supposed possible since the days when people used to be tortured in the Tower of London. We started, rushed away, dashed at once in the next shop, and called for the proprietor, with a horrible and ridiculous expectation of calmness. He came, smiling as men of his craft always do upon their victims, and that smile seemed to cut our aching tooth, for there was no more pain in it, than in our boot. We took him so, half hoping he would dissuade us from his first purpose; but, on the contrary, being on inhospitable though intent, he merely said "very likely," and that teeth seldom did ache after they got into his shop. And then with great kindness of manner, he added, will you let me see the tooth, sir? Whereupon, being quite helpless, and having no will in the matter, we opened our unhappy jaws to his inspection. He put a finger (unpleasantly suggestive of dental surgery) into our mouth. "Y had better have it out," said he, upon the completion of the survey, "you'll never be easy with it; its too gone." We gave a sickly smile, and after making some wretched and shuffling enquiries, as to the practicability of destroying the nerve, we acceded.

Turned away, rattled for an instant in a tool box for the instrument, and as we were looking round him to elude, we saw him twisting his handkerchief upon his key in his hand, to enable him to hold firm. "Just put your head back, sir, a nasty tooth, but we only require a little steady about it. There just as don't be alarmed, I shall hurt you—much OO—OO—OO—OO—OO—OO. We got down from the chair, although told to sit still, for the man must be mad, we suppose we can comply," are lugged hither and thither. Mercy on us, can ever forget how we were pelted at the man's premises. We were expected to have seen every room in his house, and should perhaps have called in to police, and that the dentist held our jaw length, and that the stubborn bone yields its way to a crash, and our trouble is over, until next time. Now contrast this wretched and barbarous operation with the pleasant surprise of Gookoo CHUM. "He was entranced, and the tooth extracted without his knowing it."

This is doubtless strange, and, in the present state of human knowledge, past our comprehension. But is it more than one of the many instances in which man made witnesses of effects, but excluded from knowledge of the cause? How

He is even yet known of the principle electricity! And yet how many and what marvellous results are traced to the subordination of this principle with such uncertainty as the most captious can desire! What do physiologists really know of the principle of life? To show how little, take the following passage from a lecture of one of the most original and enquiring of medical men, ABERNETHY.

"As muscles, is not their function amazing? Is it not amazing, that a little part of the flesh—such as may be found in the arm, would turn by a few pounds weight hanging to it, into the body itself; that it should be capable of lifting up and sustaining some hundreds of pounds in the living? Is it in its fleshy structure itself? Even the flesh is easily lacerated when in the living subject. Every inch of your skin is so tender, that a post being torn off in a mill, the whole of it will be lacerated and taken away? I have known many such instances myself. Now as to the power of the muscle: some persons say it is too great a thing to admit—that admission is something which is peculiar property of the muscle to contract; but all this I hold to be downright nonsense. I shall declare my opinion to you, to be, and which has been said long ago by Aristotle, is superadded to the visible structure of bone, so that it builds up structures; that it is superadded to it; and that it produces those peculiar phenomena—the vital phenomena—in the same manner as the air is something superadded to the structure of magnetism is to iron, or as electricity may be added to different bodies on which it is so to As magnetism is to iron, Iron is to blood; but magnetism be admitted, it does not produce iron will consequently rust. If bones are pith balls, and if placed on the floor never stir; but let them be on the floor where magnetism is there, and they will dance about like tops. The fact is, that the power of O, the most sturdy of those gentlemen whom I have known to deny this doctrine, has been obliged to admit that there was subtle kind of fluid engaged in producing the very phenomenon, that admission is made by me to be most surely champion I ever held of, in denying that electricity was something distinct and something superadded to visible objects. But how could this be doubted—and here, at present, we suppose that there is no essential fluid pervading all matter, without reducing change, is to me quite astonishing. Well, then, I think we may believe that there is some vital energy inherent in the muscles and nerves, say lightning, of a very like kind to the electric in other objects; and that it is all I need say on the subject."

And perhaps he might also have added that it was all he could say upon the subject. The fact is, that the most sagacious philosophers are entirely at fault, the instant they get beyond sensible objects. One man may theorise and guess and speculate, more ingeniously than another, but no one can effectually lift the veil that covers these great mysteries, which till now have baffled human thought.

It is not amazing, as ABERNETHY says, that the same muscle which after death contracts so easily torn, should in life, be able to sustain hundreds of pounds weight? That its mere structure itself, being apparently the same in either condition. If it were not that our sense of the wonderful, at such a fact as this, is blunted by custom, and should be as much astonished by it, as we are at the alleged facts of mesmerism. The wisest are equally ignorant of the cause of the one, as of the other. And we should act as wisely to deny point blank, against the evidence of our senses, that the same muscular tissue can resist the force of hundreds of pounds weight at one time, while at another will tear with the weight of one or two pounds,—as to deny that it is possible to take a man's teeth out of his head, whilst he is asleep. The one fact upon the slightest reflection, appears to be quite as marvellous as the other; but the miraculous power of living muscles does not surprise us, because it is a miracle we have been performing, and seeing performed, since our infancy, until we cease to notice it. Mesmeric facts, on the other hand, have only of late come under our notice and must, if there is anything new in them, force their way through the prejudices and incredulity of men. The time may arrive when vain and foolish ladies will walk off to their dentists, instead of during a mesmeric nap, change their teeth, as coolly as they may now drop down at ROBINSON'S to have their hair cut.

In concluding for the present, we merely say that the evidence in favour of the alleged phenomena of mesmerism, is too respectable to be either sneered at or laughed at; and although we are somewhat sanguine in its favour as feeling much disappointment, should the Committee Board report unfavourably of it, we shall not, if we can help it, undergo any surgical operation, until that report comes out. We have a tooth or two which have been some time condemned, but we shall certainly "sleep upon it before we again visit the dentist.

(COPY.) Ship St. George, at sea, 10th June, 1846.

To Captain Jones, ship St. George.

DEAR SIR—As our voyage is now drawing to an end, we are desirous, before separating, of testifying to you our sense of the kindness we have experienced at your hands, as well as for your unwearied zeal and attention to the safety of the good ship St. George, and all on board.

In returning you our sincere thanks for the same—and all who have made long sea voyages must be well aware how materially the comforts of the passengers must depend upon the way in which the commander discharges his duties—we hope you will add to our obligation by accepting a small testimonial of our regard in the shape of a silver cup, which will serve occasionally, we trust, to remind you of our pleasant passage home in the St. George.

With our united and best wishes for your future welfare,

Believe us to remain,

Dear Sir,

Yours, very sincerely,

To the Cabin Passengers, Ship St. George.

Ladies and Gentlemen—Allow me to express my sincere and heartfelt thanks for the handsome letter you have been pleased to address to me of yesterday's date, together with the testimonial of your regard, for my conduct since you have been passengers in the good ship St. George, which will always be a source of great satisfaction to myself and family.

I sincerely trust, Ladies and Gentlemen, that if ever you should again be passengers in any ship that I may command, my conduct will never be different to what you may have been pleased to express it has been during the voyage home.

In conclusion, I beg to thank you again for your great kindness, and to wish you all a happy meeting with your friends in merry Old England, and

I have the honour to be,

Ladies and Gentlemen,

Yours, greatly obliged,

JOHN JONES.

SIR JOSEPH BANKS HOTEL.

THOMAS KELLET, in retiring from the proprietorship of the above much-esteemed and justly favoured establishment (which step has been induced by a train of unforeseen circumstances), begs respectfully to tender his grateful acknowledgments to the ladies and gentlemen of Sydney, and of the colony generally, at whose hands he has received so many and marked favours during the period which has elapsed since the above house was first opened for public accommodation and entertainment; and feeling fully assured that the principles by which it is the determination of the new proprietor that the future conduct of the establishment shall be governed, cannot but reflect credit on his recommendation, he very confidently solicits in favour of his successor a continuation of the distinguished patronage so liberally bestowed upon himself.

THOMAS KELLET, Botany Bay.
December 5th, 1846.

WILLIAM BEAUMONT respectfully communicates to the public, (among whom he dares to hope, by unceasing endeavours to please, he will make many friends) influenced by the conviction that the "Sir Joseph Banks Hotel," at Botany, is calculated by the possession of many and peculiar advantages to attract extensive support and patronage, that he has become the proprietor of that establishment.

The beautiful situation of the Hotel, commanding as it does one of the most delightful scenes which the colony affords, added to the inducements which the medical gentlemen of Sydney have discovered, to recommend Botany Bay to such of their patients as require the pure, bracing, and invigorating qualities which so remarkably characterize its atmosphere as the spot of all others best calculated by the possession of these advantages to restore "bloom to the cheek and vigour to the limbs" of those suffering under the debility consequent on sedentary habits, intense application to business in a crowded city, and a host of other causes may be enumerated among the many advantages possessed by the Sir Joseph Banks, and which it is hoped will establish its claims to extensive public patronage.

The distance from Sydney is five miles, and at considerable expense the roads have been repaired as to render the drive an additional inducement to the hotel, which will, in every particular, be conducted upon like principles to those adopted in similar establishments at the fashionable watering places in England and on the continent, and the charges will in no respect exceed those of the respectable hotels in Sydney.

To parties who have visited the bay, it would be supererogatory to endeavour by a glowing description of its combined marine and landscape beauties, to heighten the interest they must naturally feel in a spot so enriched by "Nature's sweet adornment;" and words would fail to enable those who have never stood on the balcony in front of the hotel to form a conception of the extreme beauty of the surrounding scene.

DRAWING-ROOM.
A large and elegantly furnished apartment, opening upon the balcony, will be found to contain the appliances and means of many in-door amusements;—there are a piano-forte and other instruments in it, with a collection of excellent music.

PRIVATE APARTMENTS.
These, with the most sedulous attendance, may be engaged by the day, week, or month.

RESTAURANT.
Dinners, breakfasts, &c., the charges for which will be found strictly moderate, may be ordered according to the bill of fare.

SEA BATHING.
To the advantages above enumerated are added the facilities afforded for sea bathing in perfection, because that, at the distance of some 1/2 mile from the house, and extending for miles along the circuit of the bay, there is a delightful sandy beach, on which the water shoals so gradually, that at the very end of the jetty, a distance of nearly the eighth of a mile, (to the steps ascending which you are conducted by a path leading directly from the front of the house) the water is at no time more than seven or eight feet deep, which, in the course of preparation, shall have been completed, will upon this score leave nothing to be desired.

BOATING.
A small boat, fitted for either pulling or sailing, is constantly in readiness for marine excursions, and should a larger boat be desired, (with competent hands, intimately acquainted with every part of the bay, to manage her) may be procured upon half an hour's notice.

SHOOTING.
The neighbourhood at this season abounds with bronzed-wing pigeons, quail, snipe, &c., and birds may at all times be procured at the Hotel, upon very short notice, for pigeon matches: for rifle practice the beach affords the best possible arena.

GARDEN.
A very large garden, combining the useful with the ornamental, and affording delightful shady retreats, is another pleasing feature among the advantages possessed by the establishment.

PROMENADES.
There are beautiful walks in the neighbourhood of the Bay, as well as on the beach. Lovers of such objects will visit with pleasure the monument of La Perouse and the Tower at the North Head.

WEDDING PARTIES.
The house has already gained celebrity for the convenience afforded to wedding parties, by the advantages it possesses in point of situation, and it is confidently anticipated that, in the hands of the present proprietor, the Establishment will be found to possess infinitely increased attraction to such parties.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

SUPREME COURT.—MONDAY.
NISI PRIUS SITTINGS.
Before His Honor the Chief Justice and a Jury of four.
This was an action of trespass for mesne profits, in which Henry Macdermott was the plaintiff, and Edward B. Green was the defendant. The declaration was in the usual form, alleging a wrongful possession by the defendant for two years (from the 31st March, 1844, to the 1st of March, 1846), to the great loss, &c., of the plaintiff, whose damages were laid at £400. The defendant had pleaded—
